

Point, Line & Plane

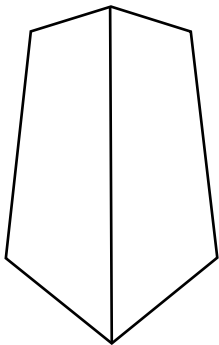

Buildings get their beauty from how points, lines, and planes create their structure and details. Points can create interesting patterns or movement.

Lines give can move the eyes around a building or further away. They guide your eye though over the edges and reveal the perspectives.

Shapes abstracted from the elements of the building reveal character. Decorations add interest, story and complexity.

Planes add a great deal of depth to the story. Three-point perspective can give the feeling of reaching to the sky, or a one-point perspective can give the feeling of moving into the distance.
